

Inclement Weather Policy

Jacksonville State University is primarily a self-contained campus with many residential students requiring a variety of support services, regardless of the weather. Therefore, the university does not completely close because of severe weather conditions. Decisions to close all nonessential university operations, to include classes, will be made by the President, or a designee. In the interest of safety and in recognition of the difficult driving conditions that occur in certain areas, the university permits a liberal makeup policy for commuter students who cannot attend classes during times of extreme weather conditions.
